

God is listening!

Relational

My husband and I suffered through a time of miscarriages and infertility, during which I was shown a vision of a beautiful baby girl. We have since adopted a beautiful baby girl, Sydney, but she is not the baby I saw in my vision, as I assumed she would be. I felt God telling me that I would one day have a biological child, too. As I became busy raising my daughter, I put aside that thought. However, others did not and continued to pray for us.

This past summer, as we began the paperwork for a second adoption, I continued to hear God speak to me about the vision. I didn't feel right about handing in the adoption paperwork. In August, I finally just told God that if He wanted us to have a biological child before we adopted again, He had better send that baby before I wrote out a big check!

A few days before I was going to send in the application, I found out I was pregnant! We are expecting a baby girl at the end of April. I know that I have seen her before and I can't wait to hold her. Our journey over the past few years has taught me to completely trust God. His timing has not been my timing, but I surrender to His perfect plan. My prayer is that our story would bring a sense of hope to those who have experienced a miscarriage or infertility. You need to know that God is listening!
